I had the great pleasure of working with Greg for many years. He is an exceptional broadcast journalist who demonstrates a great deal of range. Greg wore many hats for our network, and looked good in each! As a program host, he can tackle both hard news and light fare with equal skill. His natural sense of humor shines through. As a news anchor, his authoritative yet friendly delivery has always attracted viewers. As a reporter, he's not afraid to ask the tough questions and get the story right. I would have no hesitation in recommending Greg for any on-air role, and if given the opportunity down the road, would not hesitate to hire him again myself.

Greg Coy is a unique television man in multiple ways. One of his most valuable assets is his belief that everyone has a story, they just need a little help having it told, and he's honored to be the vessel. He tackles every item, from the A block to show end, with a delicate blend of charisma and sincerity. In the field, his tenacity cannot be matched, or subverted by those trying to dodge a tough question. His ability to ask those tough questions and also bring soft humor to the more delightful, kicker-type stories makes him an audience favorite.

Greg is even more special because of his relationships with producers. He believes in this partnership and understands it's the cornerstone of great T.V. Along with his incredible experience and knowledge, he brings a willingness to listen and work with a producer who may be asking him to try approaching the story in a new way.

On a personal note, as his producer in the field, in the booth and on the set, Greg has always given me the trust a producer needs to make a show better. In breaking news situations, I know he's ready to give updates as swiftly as I put them in his IFB. During the show, he has always respected my time management and responded to script movement and changes with ease. And in those ever important closing moments, he has always signed off with a smile and then thanked me for a great show. That's the way a great television man should be. That's the way Greg will always be.

To whom it may concern

I have known Greg Coy in a professional working relationship for over 10 years. Greg was first hired as a per diem fill-in at Fox 29 Philadelphia. He worked in a variety of roles for over a year. The assignment was temporary. A couple of staffers had overlapping maternity leaves. I grew to admire how quickly Greg took the market and grasped an understanding of stories here.

Greg must have liked Philadelphia because he stayed. We were reunited in 2003 at CN8. This time Greg was the seasoned vet and I was the newcomer. Our working relationship clicked because we loved to come up with different approaches to the same story. We also liked to dig for that story nobody had. It was harder when you had a staff of 5 as opposed to 11 like I did at Fox, but Greg made it work. He impressed the higher up bosses as well. He took over the anchor desk for the Comcast morning show in 2006. He continued to report on special projects as well as wake up for the 4:15 commute that got him to the studio at 5.

Greg is versatile and would be a great addition to any newsroom. I would be happy to provide you with any further details of Greg's work.
